Threading

Threading is an ancient technique of facial hair removal with a simple thread. It's evolution from ethnic to hip status is being replicated around the country.

An esthetician holds the end of a thread in her mouth and then uses both hands to make it taut. She quickly winds the strand around many hairs, twisting and pulling them out of their follicles by the root. The hair does not have to be as long as with waxing and can even remove very fine hair. This is a good service if you are on certain medications, have skin sensitivities or have mature skin.

Many men prefer threading to other techniques also.

Regular threading can maintain a clean, sharp appearance of the eyebrow, without the common irritation, redness or puffiness from other hair removal techniques.
